HomeBlog Match: Why We Can Never Go Back To This Stupid Design Match: Why We Can Never Go Back To This Stupid Design The popular complaint about the current NCAA basketball tournament bracket is that it's too easy. So it is, unless you live in Pittsburgh or are the half-million people that watch it live. It's too easy if you're a fan of the National Basketball Association and not of college basketball. If you're a fan of the NBA, congratulations: The NCAA is currently in the Sweet 16. But if you're a fan of college basketball, this is a completely different animal. The NCAA is currently in the quarterfinal round. Here's a link to an article that sums it up: in the college-basketball-tournament-leads-to-a-sweet-16-that-leads-to-the-national-basketball-association-tournament, where the NCAA is now. So why can't we just watch the NCAA and the NBA play each other, both of them at the same time, at different times? Because that's stupid. The NCAA tournament is designed to give an uneven advantage to the smaller schools and teams with fewer resources. The NBA tournament is designed to give an uneven advantage to the big teams with the most resources. The NBA has clearly made the appropriate move: The most important decision is to get rid of the NCAA tournament and replace it with the NBA. This is, after all, the basketball version of Trump v. Warren. The NCAA has repeatedly tried to make up for the design flaw, but in vain. All the tinkering the NCAA has done over the years just increases the level of difficulty for the better teams. So why not just give the NBA a prize for the top college basketball team? That would create an incentive for all those big-schools to compete hard against each other. It would also create an incentive for the small schools to compete hard, since that's how they'll be rewarded. The response to this idea is that it'
