The most important thing to understand about Photoshop is that it is a digital image-editing program and nothing more. If you want to be a great photographer, it would be in your best interest to learn how to edit RAW photos (which I will cover in detail in my upcoming book, "Digital Photography For Dummies"). I'm not trying to trash Photoshop.

I've used it a lot to modify my own photos for over a decade, and I continue to use it today to get a lot of work done. But I hope this article will help you come to the same conclusion that I have. Using Photoshop Photoshop works best when used in conjunction with other software programs to apply specific effects or actions, like Smart Objects.

Photoshop can do most of the heavy lifting for you, but you will still need to use the graphics tools you've learned and become familiar with the functions of your image-editing program. For more information about the Photoshop Interface, click here. Let's start with the basics. Using Photoshop Photoshop makes all of the core image-editing functions available through the menu system on the top of the screen. There are four primary areas to click to get to those functions: The first tab lets you edit a photo's layers. Each layer is basically a different image that Photoshop is stacking on top of one another. Layers in Photoshop provide one of the best features for fine-tuning images. You can flip through the layers to view which one is on top. As soon as you create a new layer, you can move it over any part of the image you like. To do this, click the Move tool on the tool bar above your canvas, and move the layer where you want it. You can also change the size of a layer or even delete it. Click the layer and use the blue-lined arrow to move to the dialog box, and select the layer you want to modify. To make it big or small, click OK. To delete the layer, click the trashcan in the dialog box to the right, and select Delete Layer. Another important use for layers is to apply effects that Photoshop is not equipped to do. Layers enable you to add special effects to the layers of your photo that the program cannot handle automatically. See the sidebar "Creating a New Layer" in this article for more information on using layers and

How to back up or restore your files Besides being used to edit images, Photoshop is also used to back up your images. If you have made any changes to the image, you may wish to revert back to the original image. The safest way to make this is to use the Save As command, which doesn't save the changes to your original file but creates a duplicate copy. To use the Save As command, highlight the image you wish to save, right-click, and choose Save As. The Save As dialog box will open. Click the Browse button to select a location to save your new image. Click the Save button to save your image. If you wish to save the original image in the same folder or folder path, click the Restore button. If the image is missing or you have deleted it, you will be able to restore it using this option. You will see a preview of the image in the bottom right hand corner. Finally, click the Save button to save your image. Restore an image using Save As. To restore your image using Save As, click the Restore button. In the Restore dialog box, select the original image file. Click the Open button to restore the image. You'll see the original file opened with the changes you made in your previous Save As image.

How to uninstall Photoshop Elements The uninstall process of Photoshop Elements is quite easy. Most of the steps are the same in both the Windows and Mac versions, but there are some differences in the Photoshop Elements setup process. Mac users can drag Photoshop Elements to the trash, which will remove it from the Mac operating system. Photoshop Elements from the list. Click the uninstall button to remove the application. You will be required to restart your computer to complete the process. Uninstall Photoshop Elements using the Uninstall button. If you don't want the Photoshop app to appear in the Windows start menu, go to the Start Menu and search for it. Starting next month, students at the UC Berkeley and UC Davis campuses may have to purchase health insurance as part of the Affordable Care Act. Those who fail to obtain insurance by January may be fined a maximum of $95 or 1 percent of their yearly income, whichever is greater. "The good news is that students will have access to affordable healthcare," said UC Berkeley spokeswoman Claire Holmes. "Many will qualify for government subsidies to lessen the cost." The UC system has joined in a coalition of nine other California universities and colleges — including UC Riverside, California State University, East Bay, San Jose State and Sonoma State — to provide a marketplace option for students. The UCs' plan is the first to be approved by the California Department of Insurance. For its marketplace, the UCs have contracted with Covered California, a state agency that operates the California exchange. Under a new program, UC and other university students can sign up for insurance on the Covered California marketplace beginning Monday, Oct. 1. Students have until Feb. 15, 2014, to purchase insurance or enroll in Medi-Cal, which is the state's low-cost program for low-income residents. The UCs will offer insurance to about half the student body, depending on demand. (This information was not available prior to the statement by Holmes.) "Students who want insurance will now be able to make an informed decision based on the information that we will make available to them," said UC Davis spokesman Anthony Molinaro. Rebecca Harrell, a UC Davis student who is uninsured, said she is considering purchasing insurance. "It's hard to know what the premiums will be," Harrell said. "What's good about the exchange is that it is state-run, so there will be consistency in what is offered, and the prices should be around the same." Renters are the only people that historically qualify for insurance through the exchange, although domestic partners and single people between ages 19 and 26 are now eligible to enroll. The marketplace is supposed to launch by the end of 2013 but did not operate last year. During the "open enrollment" period between Nov. 15, 2013, and Feb. 15, 2014, those who buy insurance on the exchange must pay a fee of 0 to 1 percent of their household income.
